

Course Description

AP Human Geography is designed to be the equivalent of an introductory college-level course. Through the study of patterns, processes, spatial concepts and landscape analysis, students will examine the impact humans have on Earth. Students will also explore the skills, tools, and methods that geographers employ in their research and applications. The main topics throughout this course include:

- Thinking Geographically
- Population and Migration
- Culture, Language, Religion and Ethnicity
- Political Patterns
- Agriculture and Rural Land Use
- Urban Land Use
- Industrial and Economic Development

Mr. Ian McClure

Mr. McClure is passionate about teaching and developing relationships with his students. His love for history and the lessons that it can teach us caused his career shift away from the corporate world and into the classroom. Mr. McClure also coaches volleyball and soccer at JRHS, serves on the Education Advisory Board at the University of Richmond, and enjoys spending time with family and friends.
